

The Society of Crows: A Glimpse Into Corvid Culture

Biologist Dr. Rob Butler is a former senior research scientist with Environment Canada's Canadian Wildlife Service. His talk will delve into the clever minds of crows and the city habits of large flocks that now reside in Vancouver. Rob explores the brains of birds and their problem-solving ways, and tackles topics such as the evolution of crow and human interactions, how parents receive help raising young, crow thievery, and a loose confederacy between neighbours that unites the group when a nest is threatened.

7:00 p.m.

Thursday, March 10

Bosa Screening Room